COA TTP Program aims for introducing qualitative and quantitative research with data analysis along with its validation. It also covers various tools and techniques, relevant software in relation with these techniques. This course is an opportunity for early researchers to gain insight of research helping in practices- teaching & their publications.

Program focuses on landscape & conservation architecture being institutional philosophy.

Architecture as a profession relates to the users along with their perception of structure/ building/ and their psychology in that space. Research brings value to the architect's practice in addition to the evolution of new theories, methods in academics. In changing scenario at global level, research in practice as well as teaching profession of architecture is widely accepted which are orientated towards design theory, sociological and policy matters. Applicable research in practice may bring change in teaching methodology as well pedagogy. Making oneself aware about the process of research is the aim of this programme. The study of research methodology provides us the necessary training in identification of research gaps, choosing methods, different tools and techniques, software for quantitative analysis relevant for the problem chosen.
