Introduction

Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design (CPTED) in Urban Well Being is a specialized workshop that focuses on integrating CPTED principles into the planning and design of built environments to enhance safety, security, and overall urban well-being.

Objectives

Urban environments profoundly influence people’s safety, mental health, and overall quality of life. With rapid urbanization, increasing density, and diverse socio-economic challenges, cities often struggle with crime, insecurity, and unsafe public spaces. Crime Prevention Through Environmental Design (CPTED) provides a design-based, multidisciplinary approach to address these concerns while simultaneously enhancing urban well-being. By integrating CPTED into architectural education and practice, future professionals can shape built environments that are not only secure but also inclusive, resilient, and supportive of human health and happiness. This Faculty Development Programme (FDP) titled “CPTED for Urban Well-being”, aimed at sensitizing and equipping architectural educators with knowledge, tools, and methods to incorporate CPTED principles into teaching, research, and practice.

Key Areas

- Introduces CPTED as a framework to enhance safety, security, and overall urban well-being.
- Examines the link between urban design, crime prevention, and community health.
- Strengthens academic integration of CPTED in teaching, curricula, and design studios.
- Highlights global and Indian case studies connecting CPTED with sustainable, liveable cities.
- Promotes interdisciplinary collaboration on urban safety across architecture, planning, sociology, and public health.
- Emphasizes the role of CPTED in fostering inclusive, healthy, and psychologically supportive urban environments that enhance overall urban well-being.
