Let's Write a Paper

Preamble:

The intellectual growth of a discipline depends deeply on how often and well; is its ongoing condition is questioned. Also, for the furtherance of the disciplines' knowledge; how often are projects were undertaken that provides a new path of development in Theory and or Practice. This study is called research.

Research is the only way that intellectual growth and an ongoing contextual approach of a discipline can be maintained. Architecture is parched for path-breaking research that takes it leaps ahead into the future.

Pioneering researchers and authors namely; Schultz, Hillier, Casey and many more; lit Architecture's path for a long time. Most of them still hold the light. No doubt there are new researchers who add to the discipline, but a lot more rigour and patience are needed today to bring a phase of enlightenment in Architecture.

Key takeaway's:

This workshop in association with COA TRC intends to lit up few more minds towards the idea of research. Writing a technical paper is a pivotal part of the research.

There are many versions of this writing, in this workshop, we will focus on getting an academic or executed project-driven paper ready from the participants both students and academicians alike. Each participant will be requested to identify an academic or executed project or a couple of similar projects that they wish to write about. While the workshop will provide an overview of the basic concepts and processes of research, it will delve deeper into aspects that will be needed to get the Academic/Executed project-driven paper going. Each aspect will be explained using examples from papers written by the course conductor.
